The History of Tufts House

Tufts House was designed by architect Henry Hornbostle for Arthur Tufts, the house's first resident and builder of Emory's original campus. The house was called "Woodland" by the Tufts family and in past years was known to the Emory community as the "Uppergate House." While some people overlook the Tufts House, surrounded by towering medical buildings, others might appreciate the quality architecture or the unique history of the house. Arthur Tufts was a friend of the Candler family (of Coca-Cola fame) and was hired by Asa Candler as the contractor for the original buildings on Emory's Atlanta campus. Arthur Tufts then hired accomplished New York architect Henry Hornbostle to design the beautiful, well crafted, pink marble buildings still standing on Emory's campus.
